1. In 1949 the former German barracks in Dziwna, Wolin district, Szczecin Voivodship, were taken over by the Poles and used as billets for interned Greek refugees and prisoners-of-war from the civil war in Greece. The barracks' complex consisted of 20 three-story buildings; it was completely surrounded by barbed wire and kept under heavy KBW guard. Source estimates that the compound could hold approximately 10,000 persons.
2. In 1950 the local populace was prohibited from moving about in the vicinity of the barracks. Prior to that time the internees had begged local citizens for food and cigarettes; the prisoners were allegedly very poorly fed and unusually thin. As of December 1952 the Greeks were still being held prisoner in the compound.
